A RAILROAD'S WORK

woods. But when the Bee Hive is started other industries will take the place of this one.
The Bee Hive is intended to shelter workers at mechanics of many sorts. The promoter intends that every man who has a trade shall be allowed to work at it as much as he likes, and for this reason has put up a big building and has furnished it with power. Two large turbines will generate power, which will be a public commodity. Anyone who can get a machine, will be allowed to set it up on the floor of this building and take the power to run it. The structure is of wood, four stories high, and will accommodate a great many workers. Not only does the builder of the house furnish the power by which the invalids may run their machines, but undertakes to find a market for the product. In other words, the sick and ailing who come, provided they show an anxiety for work, will be able to contribute a share to their own support, and will not be completely dependent upon others.
The factory is to be conducted also for those who are willing to learn trades and every man who has strength enough to whittle a stick will be given something to do, if he wants to do it. There is to be no compulsion, and only the willing and the able are to do any labor. Some are expected to bring their machines with them, but a great number will be given machines to work by the manufacturers. Machines will be installed on the floors to wait for people to come who can use them. Mr. Patrick has already received offers of mechanical appliances and devices from many manufacturing firms who desire to help the enterprise.

The work will be designed as far as possible toward the healthful, and it is expected that most of the products of the Bee Hive will be of wood. The establishment is situated in the midst of a pitch pine district, and the workers will be encouraged to handle the pitch pine because of the healing influence its odor and its dust is likely to have upon the lungs of the diseased. The Bee Hive is only one step in the system of industries which the Seaboard Air Line is developing. Mr. Patrick is the commercial agent of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad and by good fortune happened to gain possession of a fine tract of land in the pine district, part of which he is using as this industrial colony for consumptives and people disabled by other slow or chronic diseases. He began by giving the people who came to him agricultural work to do, and he hopes in the end to be able to furnish any sick person coming to him an occupation fitted to the latter's fingers. A great many people are sent to him every year from the Invalid Aid Societies all over the country. Many under the steady occupation and fine air get well quickly and come away. This arrangement of the Seaboard Air Line enables even the poorest and sickest to seek a healthful climate, because they can do a little something toward their own support.
